Can I Miss Mass Because of Bad Weather?

The answer to this question depends on the weather. Let's consider a few scenarios:

Has the weather made it impossible to drive to Mass?

When snow or ice makes it impossible to drive, the church always allows you to miss Mass, even on Sundays and Holy Days of Obligation. There's never an obligation to do what is impossible. There's no need to confess missing Mass under such circumstances, and there is no problem presenting yourself to receive the Eucharist the next time you go to Mass.

Has the weather made it possible to drive elsewhere?

If you wanted to make a trip to the grocery store, would you be willing to brave the weather to get there? Would you be willing to go out to lunch? Would you be willing to visit a friend's house? If the answer is "yes," then you also have an obligation to get to Mass. Using weather as an excuse like that is a serious sin. Get up and go!

Has the weather made it possible to drive, but dangerous?

Suppose you were compelled to drive, by necessity. You needed to get to the Emergency Room for example, but you dread every moment of the trip due to the treacherous weather conditions. Under such circumstances, it would be perfectly acceptable to stay home and miss Mass. There's never an obligation to endanger yourself. Keep in mind, however, that St. Theresa offers six Masses across nearly 24 hours between Saturday and Sunday evenings. Is the weather treacherous the entire time? Can you attend a later, or an earlier Mass? If the answer is "yes," then find a way to come.

Just so you know, here at St. Theresa, Mass is never cancelled. Your priests will offer Mass even if no one else comes. They will also be present for scheduled confessions. Come by foot, by snowmobile, by horse-drawn sleigh, or by 6x6 Arctic Cat if you wish to. Your priests will still be here, and Mass will start on time.

God bless you, and St. Theresa, pray for us!
